INVESTMENT COMMENTARY

May was yet another rollercoaster month in global equity markets, as the Fed's hawkishness, the worsening Covid situation in China and corporate earnings misses from US consumer and tech companies continued to spook markets and challenge elevated US equity valuations. The fund continues to execute its disciplined, price-drive investment philosophy, and is benefitting from the increased price focus in global equity markets. Our largest contributor to performance was French video game producer Ubisoft, which released soft full-year guidance, but highlighted its attractive mid-term earnings potential. This, combined with the depressed valuation in shares and recent industry consolidation trend, whereby Ubisoft is one of the few targets left, continued to benefit the shares. German Commerzbank raised guidance following strong results as it continues to benefit from ongoing restructuring and higher rates in core markets. Automotive supplier and recent spinoff Vitesco was also a strong contributor as recent results confirmed the strong market position in EV and solid order intake. On the negative side, Canadian tissue and packaging producer Cascades, announced weak results as cost inflation and logistical bottlenecks combined with weather-related disruption impacted earnings. While we still find the mid-term earnings potential attractive, we trimmed our position somewhat as we believe short-term normalisation will take some time and we see better risk/reward elsewhere.
