INVESTMENT COMMENTARY

SKAGEN Focus delivered a strong return for the month, outperforming the global benchmark. Small- and mid-cap stocks finally outpaced large and mega caps as signs of strain emerged in the AI-related investment space, where elevated valuations persist and concerns about financing capacity continue to build.

We continue to observe an almost record-high valuation discount for global small and mid-caps relative to larger companies. A cyclical recovery – underpinned by lower interest rates, improving consumer affordability, and progress in peace negotiations in Ukraine – could accelerate capital flows into attractively priced small and mid-cap names, particularly in Europe.

Among the strongest contributors in November was Aya, the Canadian gold and silver miner, where higher underlying commodity prices drove share performance. As Ukrainian peace talks advanced, the market also recognized the discounted value in brick producer Wienerberger, which stands to benefit significantly from potential reconstruction of the country's infrastructure.

On the detractor side, we recorded modest pullbacks in South Korean conglomerate KCC and construction machinery manufacturer Doosan Bobcat.

We exited our position in South Korean semiconductor equipment producer Eugene Technology after reaching our price target. In addition, the gold and silver miner Silvercorp also met its target, and the position was closed.
