INVESTMENT COMMENTARY

Global equities were choppy in November as continued fear and rhetoric around inflation figures, supply chain bottlenecks and covid flare-ups gripped the market. SKAGEN Global underperformed its benchmark index in November. The fund ended the month ahead of its benchmark year-to-date as well as measured over 1-year, 3-year and 5-year time periods.

The fund's best absolute performer was the French luxury goods house Hermès that has executed exceptionally well during the pandemic. In addition, the rising market cap has qualified Hermès for inclusion in the Euro Stoxx 50 index, thus adding further buying pressure from index-oriented (passive) investors. The fund's worst absolute performer was the design and engineering software company Autodesk. The market was disappointed by the company's updated outlook and billings guidance. However, we believe there may be some transitory factors at play here and Autodesk may surprise on the upside in the coming quarters since the underlying business remains solid. We will comment on portfolio trading activity, if any, at quarter end. SKAGEN Global remains attractively valued for long-term investors, although the near-term upside has moderated somewhat in light of the positive gains seen so far in 2021.
