INVESTMENT COMMENTARY

Global equities ground upwards in July as investor confidence in the economy grew while the reported pace of inflation moderated somewhat in many geographies. Still, central banks continued their interest rate hike crusade and hawkish communication showdown to defeat inflation that remains unsustainably high. Key commodities such as oil and copper climbed. The wider fallout, if any, of a military coup in the West African nation of Niger remains unknown at this point.

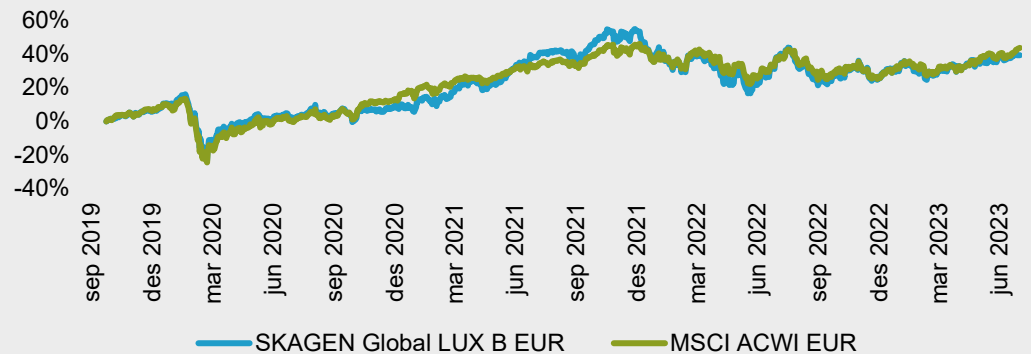

SKAGEN Global underperformed the benchmark in July. For the most part, our portfolio companies reported solid fundamental results for the second quarter, although short-term share price movements sometimes seemed excessive in both directions.

The fund's top absolute performer was the index provider MSCI that rallied after posting a reassuring update demonstrating the strength of its index franchise as well as healthy growth in the analytical segments.

The worst performer in absolute terms was the cardiovascular medical device specialist Edwards Lifesciences which fell even though the debated growth rate of its primary line of business in transcatheter aortic valve replacement performed in-line with previous guidance. Looking at the results of MSCI and Edwards Lifesciences through our long-term investment lens, the share price reactions of approximately 10 percent on reporting day were likely exaggerated. In our view, these movements exemplify the type of near-term volatility that short-term traders thrive on, but that mean very little in the long run for investors with a multi-year time horizon.
