INVESTMENT COMMENTARY

Persistently high inflation and growing fears of slowing economic growth kept a lid on global equity returns in May. While the relaxation of Covid lockdowns and announced economic stimulus in China might ease investor concerns around growth, we also expect them to support higher-for-longer energy prices. SKAGEN Kon-Tiki outperformed its benchmark during the month, largely driven by its defensive energy and diversified materials exposure. Chinese E&P company CNOOC continued to perform strongly on the back of higher energy prices, which also benefited our recent investments in TotalEnergies and Shell, both of which reported strong first quarter results. The fund also benefited from a rebound in the Brazilian market, with pulp producer Suzano and cash & carry operator Assai performing strongly. The key detractors were our more economically sensitive holdings, including Korean consumer electronics manufacturer LG Electronics and cosmetics producer Cosmax, which came under pressure from rising input costs and lockdowns in China. We invested in a former portfolio holding Cosan, a Brazilian energy-focused conglomerate, as well as its key subsidiary Raizen, a renewable energy company that produces and distributes fuels, including sugarcane ethanol and other bioproducts.
