INVESTMENT COMMENTARY

The month of November was marked by bonds rallying at the fastest monthly pace since 2008 as expectations grew that the Fed is done with policy tightening. This set the US up for interest rate cuts next year as inflation continued to slow. The dollar had its weakest month in a year, while global equities performed strongly on the back of this. Emerging markets also increased significantly but underperformed developed markets.

Prosus and Naspers were positive contributors to the fund's monthly performance. Both companies gained on strong earnings from Tencent, in addition to continued buybacks. Another contributor, Samsung Electronics is likely through the worst now with an expected earnings recovery for the next few quarters on rising memory prices as industry-wide production cuts are reducing inventories. Banco do Brasil continued its strong run; operating results have surprised on the upside while valuation remains attractive. Assai delivered solid results and the market was encouraged by the fact that the awaited deleveraging is now coming onto the horizon.

On the losing side, Alibaba's announcement that it would cancel the planned cloud-unit spinoff was taken negatively. Ping An was also negatively affected by reports that they had been asked by the government to rescue the embattled property developer Country Garden, despite denying the claims. For Sibanye, operational disappointments led to an unpopular decision to secure financing through a dilutive convertible bond. Cosmax gave back some of its recent gains.

The first line of defence for investors worried about political risk and geopolitics is robust portfolio construction and diversification. In 2024, almost half of the world's population will vote. SKAGEN Kon-Tiki offers a unique portfolio valued at half the price of the EM index despite delivering the same quality characteristics with strong growth potential and a high dividend yield. We believe EM diversification should be a key building block for anyone holding a global portfolio where EM stocks are underrepresented despite stronger growth characteristics and a unique diversification effect.
